

HALACHA V'HALICHA... By Rav Chaim Schabes

Ya'akov Avinu left behind all the help and support that he had previously had. He left his parent's home, he did not rely on the z'chus of his father and mother, he left the k'dusha of Eretz Yisrael, and he raised himself to the highest level; that is, to take only Hashem's help. He committed to giving everything away on behalf of Hashem and to fight for His cause in the most dangerous of places, and when he was willing to walk with Hashem even in the darkest place, Hashem accepted him and helped him. This is what Chazal mean to say by "Yaakov instituted the ma'ariv prayer", explains the Sfas Emes, because when one is sitting in darkness, it is not possible to approach Hashem in prayer; however, this strength was bequeathed to us, and we are also able to fight for Hashem's cause in the darkness of galus and against the obstacles of the yetzer hara, but if we put our trust in Hashem, we will also be zoche to go out from this darkness to the light of mashiach, soon in our days.

Before one starts davening, even if he knows that his hands are clean, it is a mitzvah to wash them in preparation for the tefillah; if he washed before mincha and doesn't interrupt between mincha and ma'ariv, or if he only learned between the tefillos, he doesn't need to wash again. If there is no water available, one should wipe his hands clean (MB 233:18). Once barechu was said by the sh'liach tzibur, and one has intention to daven at that minyan, it is not permitted to speak, because it is considered that the b'racha of krias sh'ma was started. The only time one is allowed to make a t'nai (condition) that he is not starting the b'racha is if one is in the middle of discussing a Torah matter or in the middle of a mitzvah; the Mishna B'rura (236:1) comments that many people are unaware of this halacha, and they transgress it. Our minhag is not to say amen after our own b'racha of עמו ישראל לעד (MB 16); however, if one finished it together with the sh'liach tzibur, he does answer amen after both his and the shatz's b'racha. There are those that have a custom to stand when they say ברוך ה' לעולם, but there are Poskim who say that one should stand only if he already said sh'mone esrei with the rest of the tzibur, and is saying afterwards sh'ma and its b'rachos, then when he reaches ברוך ה' לעולם he should stand (MB 10). In this case, one does not conclude with the final b'racha of המלך בכבודו. If one came late to Shul, after the beginning of ma'ariv, if he estimates that he can say Sh'ma with its b'rachos, and still be able to start shmone esrei with the tzibur if he skips ברוך ה' לעולם, he should do so. If he will not even be able to do that, and he will not have a later minyan, he should start shmone esrei with the tzibur, and then afterwards say sh'ma with its b'rachos, because tefillah b'tzibur has preference over connecting geula and tefillah of ma'ariv (MB11). This is also true even if they started already and are holding in the middle of shmone esrei: if he will be able to finish his own shmone esrei before they say kaddish tiskabel, then he should proceed and daven with them, and later say sh'ma with its b'rachos (OC 109). In either case, he does not conclude afterwards the ברוך ה' לעולם with the final b'racha of המלך בכבודו. One should not make this into a common practice to say first shmone esrei and then birchos sh'ma, even if his intention is to say the sh'ma slower and with more concentration. If after one davened ma'ariv he heard k'dusha from others who are davening mincha, if it is still day, he may answer with them, but once it is dark, he should not answer k'dusha. Preferably, one should daven ma'ariv before midnight (OC 235:3), but if he delayed, he may daven until alos hashachar (72 min. before sunrise). It is preferable to daven ma'ariv before midnight even without a minyan, rather than waiting for a minyan after midnight (Or L'tziyon 2:15).

THOUGHTS ON THE HAFTARAH ... By Rabbi Yaakov Shapiro (Hoshea 12:13-14:10)

תרי עשר (Part 1) – This is one of four sefarim authored by the Anshei Knesses Hagedola (Bava Basra 15a) and is actually comprised of several individual sefarim that were combined to make up a single sefer. The Gemara explains that this was done because each individual sefer was so small that they were afraid that if they remained as separate sefarim they might be lost (Bava Basra 14b; Radak). Yet even with combining all 12 into one sefer it still contains only 1,050 pesukim, making it the shortest of the sifrei Neviim (Yechezkel being the next shortest with 1,273 pesukim). This distinctiveness of "sefarim within a single sefer" has Halachic ramifications regarding Haftaras. Normally, a Haftara must be read from a single Navi, but if they are both part of תרי עשר it is permissible to read from two different Neviim since they are all contained within one physical scroll. This of course explains why the Haftara of Shabbos Shuva covers portions of three different Neviim. The sefer is the last of the 8 sifrei Neviim and contains prophecies that span approximately 330 years, including those of the last Neviim, Chagai, Zecharya, and Malachi, who lived at the time of the second Bais Hamikdash. There are those who refer to תרי עשר as the "Minor Prophets" which is a gross misrepresentation. For example, in the beginning of sefer Hoshea (the start of תרי עשר) it says ה' בהושע תחילת דבר. The Gemara explains that Hoshea was the first of four Neviim, including Yeshayahu, who all prophesized at the same time. The Gemara (Pesachim 87a) goes as far as to refer to him as the "Gadol B'Neviim". Even the cryptic prophecies of Zecharya, who was among the last of the Neviim and who lived at a time when in general the power of Nevuah was relatively weak, are considered by Abarbanel to be of extraordinarily deep meaning.

ON LANGUAGE... By R' Moshe Orlian

After Lavan tricks Ya'akov into marrying Leah, he tells Ya'akov (B'resihis 29:27) מלא שבוע זאת. The mefarshim point out that זאת, "this", refers to Leah, and not to the week. The correct interpretation is "complete the [celebratory] week of Leah", and not "complete this week". שבוע here has a sh'va under the ש rather than a kamatz, indicating that it is a smichus form, translated as "week of...". It therefore does not make sense that 'this' refers to the week itself, since the translation would then be the nonsensical "week of this". Further, שבוע is a masculine noun and should be referred to as זה. Thus, the correct way to say "this week" would be השבוע הזה, with a kamatz under the ש and a hiyud preceding זה. This latter pattern is seen earlier in the parsha (28:22): והאבן הזאת, "and this rock".

MECHOCHMAS HAS'FORNO... By Rabbi Shmuel Burstein

S'forno's comment on the name negotiation between Lavan and Ya'akov is profound. Ya'akov and Lavan make a treaty; the place needs a "name." Just a name. Or is it? Ya'akov insists on "Gal'ed." Lavan requests the Aramaic equivalent. S'forno sees a Ya'akov "victory", לשונו - שלא שינה את לשונו - he did not change his language. R' Kupperman picks up on S'forno's intentions: a reference to the Mechilta (Mesechta D'Pischa 5) that B'nai Yisrael merited redemption from Egypt because (inter alia) they continued to use their "Jewish" names, and סימן לבנים מעשה אבות; Yaakov set a spiritual force in motion that let his later descendants behave that way (not changing their names). Lavan lost this one; he says הגל הזה עד, Yaakov's words. But the real showdown followed. In whose name do they swear the oath of non-aggression? Yaakov: in the name of "the God of Avraham." Lavan: in the name of "the god of Nachor." But then Lavan adds אלוהי אביהם (see Rashi, this is not a 'holy' name). At this point the Torah tells us something that might slip by, if not for S'forno: שישבע יעקב בפחד אביו יצחק; Yaakov swore in the name of the God of Yitzchak. Lavan sought "egalitarian" treatment, says S'forno. He wanted "his" god, Nachor's god, to be respected as much as the "God of Avraham." Why did he even dream of seeking this? S'forno's words have a profound echo for our times: "You [really] should not mind if I use the name of the god of Nachor. After all, the god of Nachor was also the god of Terach, who was Avraham's father, as well as Nachor's." Ya'akov does not budge, swearing in the name of Yitzchak's God. Why Yitzchak? Because Yitzchak's father was not Terach! As in modern times, with [not so] subtle efforts of some to legitimize anti-Torah beliefs within the world of Torah thought, R' Kupperman sees such an effort on Lavan's part. He seeks to find legitimacy within "monotheism" for the god of Nachor. Ya'akov cannot allow such a thing. If need be, he will change the way he identifies his God so as not to cause confusion. Hashem is echad. There is another point that R' Kupperman does not bring out but which I would like to suggest for thought within S'forno's comments. One of the insidious consequences of Lavan's argument, according to S'forno (i.e., we are really all the same,) is the opening up of another dangerous door. "How much did Avraham really change, anyway? After all, he still is the brother of Nachor and the son of Terach." What Lavan craftily says to Ya'akov is not to take the work of Avraham Avinu "too seriously." Did he really cause the great world revolution in morality? Maybe this is all a little overdone. After all, he is the son of Terach. Why, he even worshiped "Terach's god," once upon a time, just like Nachor! This is what אלוהי אביהם implies. Such a statement irreparably cheapens the life's work and dramatic change of Avraham Avinu. The Torah has long since solved this issue. Hashem testified to this by changing the very "name" of our father 'Avram,' to 'Avraham.' But such subtleties escape Lavan and all who mock sincere efforts to improve one's soul, one's spiritual identity through their life's work. Ya'akov rejects "it's all the same." And he teaches us that each of us can form our own, new relationship to the same Borei Olam... בפחד יצחק

"A GIGANTIC LITTLE SECRET" ... By Rabbi Yosef Schwab

התקרא את שמה דינה - as Rashi notes, Leah davened to HaShem so that she would not have another boy, since that would mean that Rachel, her beloved sister, would have fewer shvatim than even the shfachos – and HaShem altered the fetus's gender. The name דינה alludes to this "argument": דין-ה'.
